Extracts From the Bill.

To quote Mr. Royall's own language the story of the couple's domestic infelicities reads like a chapter from Balzac, and certainly this is hardly stating the matter too strongly. The amended bill, which covers lifty-one thanks of typewritten matter holds. Balzac, and certainly this is hardly stating the matter too strongly. The amended bill, which covers fifty-one pages of typewritten matter, holds the reader's interest from start to finish, and at times completely engrosses the attention, for it embodies letters and other documents that are strikingly illustrative of the stress of strikingly illustrative of the stress of

The first page recites the fact that Emma L. Tenney was married to George O. Tenney December 20, 1883. in New York State, and that there was a child born of this union. She was named Aleda and first saw the light February 18, 1886. This child is now the wife of Tillman Bunch, of South Carolina, to whom she was married Carolina, to whom she was married in July, 1909.

After the wedding of the Tenneys they resided in different parts of the country, as the defendant's business as a contractor called him to Massa-chusetts, Alabama, Tennessee, North Carolina, South Carolina and finally they moved to Virginia about April, where they last dwelt together. The bill says:

Your complainant was never unfaithful or untrue to her said husband in thought, word or deed, in any part of her married life, but she now prays for a divorce from his bed and board on account of cruelty and desertion.' "According to the bill it was not thill August, 1899, that the harmony existing was disturbed. At that time there happened an event 'that colorered and ruined complainant's life.' Says He Is Fickle.

"Since that event (sic) complainant has found that her said husband is a libertine with no regard what-ever for his marriage vows and without any moral principle whatever. One article in his creed is that no man should be required to live with a woman after he gets tired of her and his life for more than ten years past has been an illustration of this article of his creed."

"The Other Woman." "The other woman," according to bill, was first detected in her wrongdoing in Spartanburg, S. C., when one of her letters fell into the hands of Mrs. Tenney. This com-munication is quoted, but it can hardbear repetition in a family news-aper: The discovery of the husband's alged infidelity had a terrible effect ipon the wife. It "weighed upon her heart and mind, and her health and her spirits declined and continued to decline. Finally, in October, 1901, her condition had become such that she found it absolutely necessary to ob tain a change of scene and surroundings, and with her husband's approval she went to Atlanta, Ga., in October, 1901, to spend the time with some Despite her sorrow, Mrs. Tenney apparently made an effort to forgive her husband for his alleged misdemeanors. In a pathetic letter written him from Atlanta, December 1, 1901, she says in part: "I first want to tell you frankly that I am not staying to pout or to get rid of your society. I will state more than this—of all the more I have ever met if I were free. men I have ever met, if I were free to marry, I would choose you again. This I am willing for you to know, notwithstanding I am perfectly and painfully aware that I am nothing to you, but a woman you are tied to and remain with because of Leda (the daughter).

"I consider myself now nearly in normal state of mind. I realize fully that the sudden and unlooked-for development of your feelings for me and attitude toward me for years that the letter from your loved one made evident, shocked me almost to insanity. For two years and more I have struggled with myself not to lose my mind-struggled with fierce, trem-bling intensified by the belief that there was in our family blood a tendency towards insanity.

all my sense of morality was wrong—that not the mind or the spirit of the woman was what appealed to a man even when he was a woman's husband, but her hold over him only physically—that a wife was not to be shielded, but the mistress, was rather late in coming in my life's sense of honor and shook me to the center of my whole being."

Lawyer William L. Royall, representing the complaining spouse, asked permission of the judge of the Law and Equity Court to file an amended bill.

Originally, Mrs. Tenney went into the Chancery Court with a mere request that her husband be forced to support her, but the action of her counsel today puts her in a different category. Now she asks a limited divorce, which technically is known as a divorce from bed and board.

The amended bill goes much further than the one originally filed and accompanies the plea for equity with a big budget of exhibits in the way of letters, reports and the like.

"Well, I'm glad to hear that." He He ed, a very different situation will present itself to the Richmond theatergoing public from that which has ob tained since the so-called theatrica trust has been in existence. Two facts stand out clearly—Richmond will see the independent attractions for which the Shuberts, William A. Brady and others of like prominence are respon sible, and Richmond will also see the Klaw & Erlanger attractions, despite the rather fiery proclamation which issued from the trust headquarters to the effect that a boycott would be placed upon all houses in the South in which the open door policy was maintained. Jake Wells having divorced himheart of London and circled the dome that is offered in the amusement line, of St. Paul's.

Hofheimer. Of course it may develop that the Schil-ler Company will go into the new theater, but the former arrangement holds at present.

All of this simply means that Jake Wells and his associates of the open door policy are covering up every pos-sible avenue in order not to let their quarry escape, this same quarry being Klaw & Erlanger and the trust. If the open-doorites control all of the theaters, then obviously the trust must theaters, then obviously the trust must come to them in order to show in Richmond. Norfolk and other Southern cities. The fact that the trust says. "If you don't let me in you can't have any shows" cuts very little figure for the reason that the permanent stock, supplemented by the independent attractions, will fill all open time. Thus the public will get good shows all of the time and at reasonable prices. Incidentally, it might not be unwise to state that the permanent stock proposition is a direct result of the threat on the part of Klaw & Erlanger.

Another rumor has it that Jake Wells, as in the old days of the Bijou Comedy Company, will organize a troupe to play his "wheel"; that is, a company, playing the lighter musical and straight comedies, to fill the time in his various houses throughout the South and in the other cities of his circuit. Whether any or all of these rumors are true remains to be seen. rumors are true remains to be seen.
It now looks like a cinch bet that Jake Wells is on top and that Richmonders who spend their money for

When Saybrook was reached the novitiates—some of them were hardly able to walk by this time—were unstrapped and taken from the train blindfolded. Then the "hellish" procession started. At the Methodist Episcopal Church the procession halted and a number of them broke into the edifice and stole the pulpit furniture.
